THE HIND FAMILY OF OCARINAS

From its earliest appearance in the ancient civilizations of the world to the present day, the ocarina has possessed the allure of the flute while maintaining a mystique all its own.

The earliest "globular flutes" (ocarinas) were made of clay and often were in the shape of small animals. Others appeared through the ages in many cultures, and the name "ocarina" was given to the instrument in Italy in the 1860's. Earlier this century they were called "sweet potatoes" in this country, and during World War II the U.S. government issued mass-produced plastic ocarinas to its soldiers as a morale booster.

Now there is a whole family of ocarinas hand-crafted from American black walnut. Each one is a highly finished and refined musical instrument.
